History of Roto-Rooter

Roto-Rooter was founded in 1935 by Samuel Blanc in Des Moines, Iowa. The company was born out of Blanc's innovative idea to create a machine that could clear clogged drains more effectively than previous methods. This machine, known as the Roto-Rooter, featured a rotating blade that could cut through roots and other blockages in pipes, revolutionizing the plumbing industry at the time.

The unique name "Roto-Rooter" reflects the machine's functionality, as it was designed to "root out" clogs and obstructions. The success of this invention led to the establishment of franchises, allowing the company to expand rapidly across the United States and later into Canada.

Early Years and Innovations

During its early years, Roto-Rooter focused primarily on residential plumbing services, using its innovative equipment to set itself apart from competitors. As the company grew, it continued to innovate its services and technology, ensuring that it remained at the forefront of the plumbing industry.

Some of the notable innovations introduced by Roto-Rooter include:
