

running in the family

running in the family is a phrase often used to describe traits, behaviors, or characteristics that appear consistently across multiple generations within a family. This concept extends beyond just genetics to include cultural influences, habits, and shared environments that contribute to familial similarities. In this article, we will explore the various dimensions of what it means for something to be running in the family, including genetic inheritance, environmental factors, and psychological influences. Understanding these elements provides valuable insight into how traits and tendencies are passed down or cultivated among relatives. Additionally, the article will cover common examples of traits that tend to run in families, the role of nature versus nurture, and how modern science approaches the study of hereditary patterns. A comprehensive look at this topic illuminates the complex interplay between biology and environment in shaping individuals and families alike.

Genetic Foundations of Traits Running in the Family

Genetics play a fundamental role in many traits that are said to be running in the family. Genes, the basic units of heredity, are passed from parents to offspring and contain instructions that influence physical characteristics, predispositions to certain health conditions, and even behavioral tendencies. The study of genetics has revealed how specific genes or combinations thereof contribute to the inheritance of traits such as eye color, height, and susceptibility to diseases.

Inheritance Patterns

Traits running in families often follow established inheritance patterns, including dominant, recessive, and sex-linked transmission. Dominant traits require only one copy of a gene to be expressed, while recessive traits need two copies. Sex-linked traits are associated with genes located on sex chromosomes. Understanding these patterns helps explain why some traits appear frequently in families, while others may skip generations or affect only certain members.

Genetic Mutations and Variations

Occasionally, new genetic mutations arise that can be passed on to descendants, introducing variation into familial traits. While many mutations have no noticeable effect, some can cause inherited disorders or unique characteristics that become identifiable in family lineages. Genetic variations also contribute to differences among family members, even when certain traits are commonly observed.

Environmental and Cultural Influences

While genetics provide the blueprint, environmental and cultural factors play a critical role in shaping traits that appear to be running in the family. Shared environments, lifestyle choices, and cultural practices influence physical and psychological development, often reinforcing familial similarities.

Shared Living Environments

Family members typically grow up in similar environments where diet, socioeconomic status, education, and exposure to environmental factors affect their health and behavior. These shared conditions can contribute to patterns such as familial obesity, language acquisition, or attitudes toward education that seem to “run in the family.”

Cultural Traditions and Family Practices

Cultural heritage and family traditions also impact traits that are passed down through generations. Customs related to diet, religion, social behavior, and occupational choices can influence the development of habits and values that become a hallmark of a particular family.

Common Traits and Conditions Running in Families

Many traits and conditions are commonly observed to run in families due to a combination of genetic and environmental factors. These can range from physical characteristics to health conditions and behavioral tendencies.

Physical Traits

Physical characteristics such as hair and eye color, facial features, height, and body type often exhibit familial patterns. These traits are usually influenced by multiple genes and can be strong indicators of biological relationships.

Health Conditions

Certain diseases and health conditions, including heart disease, diabetes, certain cancers, and mental health disorders, have been shown to have familial links. A family history of these conditions often signifies a higher risk for individuals, underscoring the importance of genetic counseling and preventive healthcare.

Behavioral and Psychological Traits

Behavioral patterns and psychological traits such as temperament, intelligence, and susceptibility to mood disorders may also run in families. Although these traits are complex and influenced by many factors, familial studies have identified genetic components as well as environmental contributions.

Nature versus Nurture Debate

The phrase running in the family often raises the question of nature versus nurture: to what extent are inherited traits determined by genetics versus environmental influences? This longstanding debate continues to evolve as research deepens our understanding of human development.

Genetic Predisposition versus Environmental Impact

Many traits result from an interplay between genetic predisposition and environmental factors. For example, a person may inherit genes that predispose them to high intelligence, but their actual cognitive development will depend heavily on their upbringing and educational opportunities.

Epigenetics and Gene Expression

Epigenetics is a growing field that studies how environmental factors can influence gene expression without altering the DNA sequence. This means that lifestyle, stress, and nutrition can affect how genes are turned on or off, potentially impacting traits that run in families across generations.

Scientific Approaches to Studying Familial Traits

Modern science employs various methods to study traits running in families, aiming to distinguish the contributions of genetics and environment and to identify the underlying biological mechanisms.

Family and Twin Studies

Family studies assess trait prevalence among relatives, while twin studies compare identical and fraternal twins to estimate genetic influence. These approaches help quantify heritability and the role of shared environments in familial traits.

Genomic and Molecular Research

Advances in genomic sequencing and molecular biology allow researchers to identify specific genes associated with familial traits and diseases. These tools facilitate personalized medicine approaches and improve understanding of complex hereditary patterns.

Longitudinal and Epidemiological Studies

Longitudinal studies track individuals and families over extended periods, providing insight into how traits develop and change. Epidemiological research examines patterns in populations to identify familial risk factors and preventive measures.

- Recognition of genetics as a major factor in familial traits
- Significance of shared environments and cultural transmission
- Diverse examples of physical, health-related, and behavioral traits
- Interplay of nature and nurture in trait development
- Scientific methodologies advancing the understanding of hereditary patterns

Frequently Asked Questions

What does the phrase 'running in the family' mean?

The phrase 'running in the family' means that a particular trait, characteristic, or condition is common among members of the same family, often passed down through genetics or shared environment.

Can diseases run in the family?

Yes, certain diseases like diabetes, heart disease, and some types of cancer can run in families due to genetic predispositions and shared lifestyle factors.

Is talent running in the family always genetic?

Not necessarily; while genetics can play a role in talents such as musical ability or athleticism, environment, upbringing, and practice also significantly influence skill development.

How can I find out if a health condition runs in my family?

You can gather a detailed family medical history from your relatives and discuss it with a healthcare professional who may recommend genetic testing or preventive measures.

Does personality run in the family?

Personality traits can have genetic components, but they are also shaped by environmental factors, upbringing, and personal experiences, so they are influenced by both nature and nurture.

Are there any famous examples of traits running in the family?

Yes, for example, the Bach family is known for musical talent spanning generations, and certain royal families have a history of specific genetic disorders.

Can lifestyle choices affect traits that run in the family?

Absolutely; lifestyle choices such as diet, exercise, and smoking can influence the expression or impact of inherited traits, especially regarding health-related conditions.

Is it possible to break the cycle of negative traits running in the family?

Yes, through awareness, lifestyle changes, and sometimes medical intervention, individuals can reduce or prevent the manifestation of negative traits or hereditary conditions.

How do scientists study traits that run in families?

Scientists use methods like genetic studies, family pedigrees, and twin studies to understand how certain traits or diseases are inherited and expressed in families.

Can psychological conditions run in the family?

Yes, some psychological conditions such as depression, anxiety, and bipolar disorder have genetic components and may run in families, though environment also plays a crucial role.

running in the family: Diversité Déconstruite Et Reconstruite de L'oeuvre de Michael Ondaatje Jean-Michel Lacroix, 1999 running in the family: Trading Magic for Fact, Fact for Magic Marc Colavincenzo, 2003

This study brings together three major areas of interest - history, postmodern fiction, and myth. Whereas neither history and postmodern fiction nor history and myth are strangers to one another, postmodernism and myth are odd bedfellows. For many critics, postmodern thought with its resistance to metanarratives stands in direct and deliberate contrast to myth with its apparent tendency to explain the world by means of neat, complete narratives. There is a strain of postmodern Canadian historical fiction in which myth actually forms a complement not only to postmodernism's suspicion of master-narratives but also to its privileging of those marginal and at times ignored areas of history. The fourteen works of Canadian fiction considered demonstrate a doubled impulse which at first glance seems contradictory. On the one hand, they go about demythologizing - in the Barthesian sense - various elements of historical discourse, exposing its authority as not simply a natural given but as a construct. This includes the fact that the view of history portrayed in the fiction has been either underrepresented or suppressed by official historiography. On the other hand, the history is then re-mythologized, in that it becomes part of a pre-existing myth, its mythic elements are foregrounded, myth and magic are woven into the narrative, or it is portrayed as extraordinary in some way. The result is an empowering of these histories for the future; they are made larger than life and unforgettable.

running in the family: Masculine Migrations Daniel Coleman, 1998-01-01 Examines the representation of masculinities in the work of some of Canada's most exciting writers, including Michael Ondaatje, and Rohinton Mistry, to show how cross-cultural migration disrupts assumed codes for masculine behaviour and practice.

running in the family: Writing Within / Without / About Sri Lanka Paolo Brusasco, 2010-12-01 Paola Brusasco's study offers an original insight into Sri Lankan literature in English and an exploration of cultural, social, and linguistic issues at the basis of the country's ethnic conflict. By focussing on two distinctive and representative writers, both Burghers, yet with different personal histories, Brusasco confronts issues of cartography, history, and language, all contributing to a specific definition of identity. Both Ondaatje and Muller are outsiders, the former because of his diasporic existence, the latter because of his excentricity within the reality of a divided country where the legacy of British colonialism and the process of redefinition following independence in 1948, as well as matters of geography and history, become crucial to writers.

running in the family: Handbook of Autobiography / Autofiction Martina Wagner-Egelhaaf, 2019-01-29 Autobiographical writings have been a major cultural genre from antiquity to the present time. General questions of the literary as, e.g., the relation between literature and reality, truth and fiction, the dependency of author, narrator, and figure, or issues of individual and cultural styles etc., can be studied preeminently in the autobiographical genre. Yet, the tradition of life-writing has, in the course of literary history, developed manifold types and forms. Especially in the globalized age, where the media and other technological / cultural factors contribute to a rapid transformation of lifestyles, autobiographical writing has maintained, even enhanced, its popularity and importance. By conceiving autobiography in a wide sense that includes memoirs, diaries, self-portraits and autofiction as well as media transformations of the genre, this three-volume handbook offers a comprehensive survey of theoretical approaches, systematic aspects, and historical developments in an international and interdisciplinary perspective. While autobiography is usually considered to be a European tradition, special emphasis is placed on the modes of self-representation in non-Western cultures and on inter- and transcultural perspectives of the genre. The individual contributions are closely interconnected by a system of cross-references. The handbook addresses scholars of cultural and literary studies, students as well as non-academic readers.

running in the family: Between Homelands in Michael Ondaatje's Fiction Julie Mehta, Harish Mehta, 2024-09-13 Between Homelands in Michael Ondaatje's Fiction is a comprehensive study of the novels of the Sri Lankan-Canadian author and poet, Michael Ondaatje. This survey of the Booker Prize-winning novelist's works locates him as a powerful voice that urges globalization and multiculturalism in a world that is closing its borders. It reconnoitres Ondaatje's search for a homeland by cracking open the core of his evocative, inventive, and innovative concepts that undergird his art of storytelling. The contributors in this volume examine themes such as literary cosmopolitanism, Sri Lankan identity, diasporic identity, race and racism, home and belonging, trauma in the Sri Lankan civil war, war games, and uncertainty theory. An important contribution to Ondaatje studies, the book is an indispensable resource for students and researchers of Sri Lankan literature, diasporic and world literatures, South Asian and Canadian studies, cultural studies, postcolonial fiction, and history.

running in the family: Asian Diasporas Robbie B.H. Goh, Shawn Wong, 2004-03-01 Asian diasporas are all too often seen in terms of settlement problems in a host nation, where the focus is on issues of crime, housing, employment, racism and related concerns. The essays in this volume view Asian diasporic movements in the context of globalization and global citizenship, in which multiple cultural allegiances, influences and claims together create complex negotiations of identity. Examining a range of cultural documents through which such negotiations are conducted — literature and other forms of writing, media, popular culture, urban spaces, military inscriptions, and so on — the essays in this volume explore the meanings and experiences involved in the two major Asian diasporic movements, those of South and East Asia.

running in the family: Reciprocities in the Nonfiction Novel John Russell, 2000 Nonfiction novels have usually been associated with the new journalism writers of the 1960s such as Tom Wolfe, Norman Mailer, and Truman Capote. Yet this form has long commanded a key position in the literary canon, as John Russell now reveals. Russell identifies eleven major works not usually thought of as nonfiction novels, such as Isak Dinesen's Out of Africa and E. E. Cummings's The Enormous Room, to create a new definition of the genre. He shows that journalistic writing is characterized by a reporter's proprietary stance, which undermines reciprocity with subjects, while true nonfiction novels feature greater reciprocity and also employ such techniques as circular narrative and bricolage. Reciprocities in the Nonfiction Novel contributes to ongoing explorations of literary forms and offers wise commentary on how writing about real life can become art.

running in the family: The Diaspora Writes Home Jasbir Jain, 2017-09-13 This book by eminent author Jasbir Jain explores the many ways the diaspora remembers and reflects upon the lost homeland, and their relationship with their own ancestry, history of the homeland, culture and the current political conflicts. Amongst the questions this book asks is, 'how does the diaspora relate to their home, and what is the homeland's relationship to the diaspora as representatives of the contemporary homeland in another country?'. The last is an interesting point of discussion since the 'present' of the homeland and of the diaspora cannot be equated. The transformations that new locations have brought about as migrants have travelled through time and interacted with the politics of their settled lands---Africa, Fiji, the Caribbean Islands, the UK, the US, Canada, as well as the countries created out of British India, such as Pakistan and Bangladesh---have altered their affiliations and perspectives. This book gathers multiple dispersions of emigrant writers and artistes from South Asia across time and space to the various homelands they relate to now. The word 'write' is used in its multiplicity to refer to creative expression, as an inscription, as connectivity, and remembrance. Writing is also a representation and carries its own baggage of poetics and aesthetics, categories which need to be problematised vis-à-vis the writer and his/her emotional location.

running in the family: The Complete Idiot's Guide to a Successful Family Business Janis Raye, Neil Raphael, 2009-08-04 It's all in the family Family businesses are the backbone of any economy, but they can present a host of challenges that can affect their chances of success. running in the family: It Runs In My Family Joan C. Barth, 2013-10-28 This volume offers therapists effective, practical strategies for helping patients overcome the psychological impact of a history of serious illness in the family. Using illustrative case material, the author discusses the feelings of powerlessness that family illness can produce in an individual, and describes techniques for fostering a healthier, more empowered attitude. She shows how various assessment exercises and validation techniques can help the person distinguish between reality and the myths that evolved as a result of the family illness.

running in the family: Family Business on the Couch Manfred F. R. Kets de Vries, Randel S. Carlock, 2010-03-02 The challenge faced by family businesses and their stakeholders, is to recognise the issues that they face, understand how to develop strategies to address them and more importantly, to create narratives, or family stories that explain the emotional dimension of the issues to the family. The most intractable family business issues are not the business problems the organisation faces, but the emotional issues that compound them. Applying psychodynamic concepts will help to explain behaviour and will enable the family to prepare for life cycle transitions and other issues that may arise. Here is a new understanding and a broader perspective on the human dynamics of family firms with two complementary frameworks, psychodynamic and family systematic, to help make sense of family-run organisations. Although this book includes a conceptual section, it is first and foremost a practical book about the real world issues faced by business families. The book begins by demonstrating that many years of achievement through generations can be destroyed by the next, if the family fails to address the psychological issues they face. By exploring cases from famous and less well known family businesses across the world, the authors discuss entrepreneurs, the entrepreneurial family and the lifecycles of the individual and the organisation. They go on to show how companies going through change and transition can avoid the pitfalls that endanger both family and company. The authors then apply tools that will help family businesses in transition and offer their analyses and conclusions. Readers should draw their own conclusions from careful examination of the cases, identifying the problems or dilemmas faced and the options for improved business performance and family relationships. They should ask what they might have done in the given situation and what new insight into individual or family behaviour each case offers. The goal is to avoid a bitter ending.
